Fund Review and Strategy

As of the end of the reporting period, the Fund's total assets stood at approximately GHS 218.5m. Of this, GHS 112m was deployed across four unlisted debt positions, comprising GHS 49.3m in cedi-denominated instruments and USD 5.7m in U.S. dollar exposures. The outstanding assets are held in money market instruments pending disbursement into approved pipeline transactions. The Fund recorded a month-on-month performance of 2.38%, an improvement from the -1.24% return achieved in the previous month. The fund's current weighted average yield reflects its strategic positioning, highlighting a potential for long-term growth as more deals are closed.

Looking ahead, the Fund continues to build its investment pipeline, with at least four new transactions at various stages of execution and expected closures within Q1 of 2026. Furthermore, significant progress following recent capital-raising efforts has strengthened the Fund's capacity to pursue larger opportunities and enhance operational efficiency. We expect increased deal activity going into 2026, following declining interest rates as several corporates reinstate paused investment activities.

Market Overview

The inflation print for January 2026 came in at 3.8%, well below the lower bound of the Bank of Ghana's 6–10% target range. While this is a landmark achievement, the market remains cautious regarding treasury pricing, as the impact of previous price volatility and expectations surrounding fiscal uncertainty may cause inflation to creep up in the medium term. In response to the broader disinflationary trend, the Monetary Policy Committee reduced the policy rate by 250 basis points to 15.5%. This move is intended to encourage private sector lending and gradually pivot the economy toward real-sector growth. However, risks to the inflation outlook remain, particularly oil price volatility, potential upward adjustments in utility tariffs, and renewed pressures within the food basket.
